PROFESSIONAL RECRUITERS

Professional Recruiters can be helpful in five key ways:

- Connections: A good recruiter will have relationships with many companies. This will mean not only that the recruiter can convince someone to pick up your resume, but he may also know about unadvertised job openings.
- Matching you: A good recruiter will understand your background and interests, as well as the culture and expectations of their client companies.
- Feedback: A good recruiter will be able to assess where your weaknesses are with respect to each individual job. By knowing this in advance, you can be better prepared to reassure the company of your qualifications. They can also help you prepare by suggesting questions you should or telling you what questions to avoid.
- Handling issues: Once you land the offer, your recruiter can help you with anything from understanding if an offer is fair to actually helping you negotiate your offer. Because recruiters get a percentage bonus of your salary, they have a strong incentive to help you get the best offer you can.
- Reopening a door: Sometimes rejections don't mean that you weren't a good fit for the company; you just may not have been a good fit for the position.

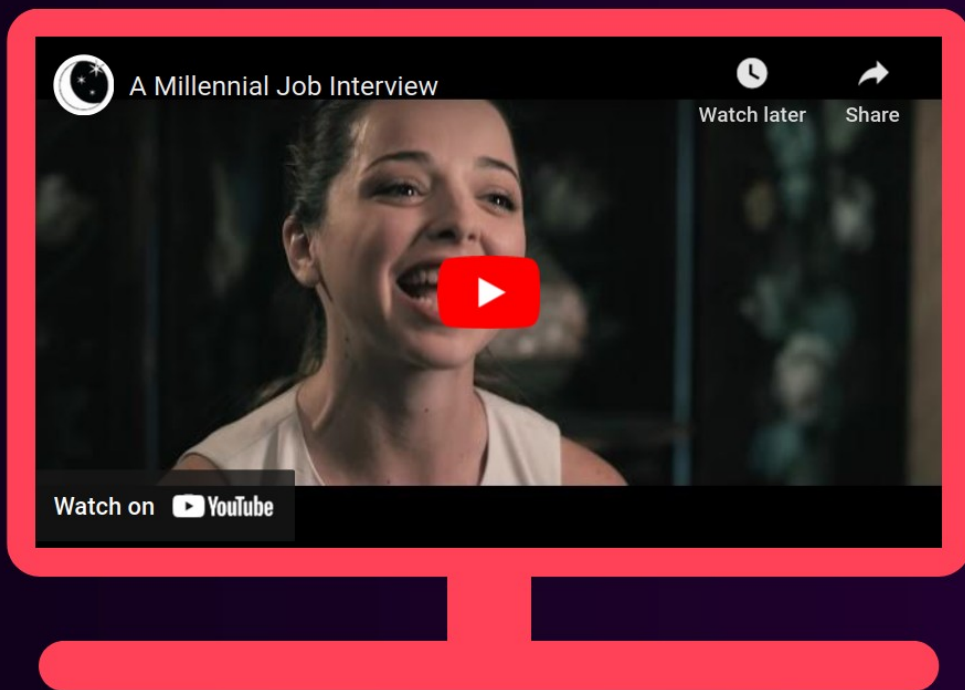

Like any other profession, some recruiters are great and some are not. Make sure you've found a good one.
