RELEVANT SKILLS

These skills can come from your college work, volunteering, launching your own business or side project, or your professional life. These skills can include the following:

- Field-specific skills: If you want to be a marketer, learn about marketing. If you want to be in sales, help a local organization raise money. Without a tangible skill, you'll likely blend in with everyone else.
- Numerical/quantitative skills: Take some classes, either at your school or online, that require math: engineering, calculus, statistics, economics, and so on.
- Communication skills: Communication, whether written or oral, is vitally important to your career success. If you aren't comfortable with public speaking, get practice with it. If your writing is weak, take a writing course or start a blog.
- Initiative: Initiative is shown through starting things, so start something. This can be a new club at school, running a meet-up on SEO (search engine optimization) skills, or launching a new project at your current job.
- Accomplishment: Develop a track record of achievement. Recruiters want to see that you have a pattern of setting ambitious goals and accomplishing them.
- Leadership: You don't need to be the president of a club or the manager of your team (though those are nice, of course), but find something you can lead.

Review the pronunciation of the highlighted words.
